

Implications of Vision: Exercise

Instructions

This tool is aimed at helping you to reflect on the daily implications of visions of student success. Read the three teacher reflections below, and consider the student outcomes, teacher actions, and teacher mindsets in the context of each.

Pooja (India)

My students will grow into adults who are hardworking and passionate about their work. They will be curious, will challenge and question new ideas, will be caring toward others, and will respect their country and their environment. They will be able to collaborate with others to solve real-world problems.

What student outcomes at the end of the year give confidence students are making progress toward the vision?

What teacher actions define successful teaching?

What teacher mindsets define successful teaching?

Saúl (Mexico)

We are autonomous entrepreneurs and are capable of setting our own goals and excelling in society, while having the knowledge to develop a workplace with a future. Besides succeeding academically, we will cultivate social awareness to help change our community and become active members of it.

What student outcomes at the end of the year give confidence students are making progress toward the vision?

What teacher actions define successful teaching?

What teacher mindsets define successful teaching?

Wisdom (USA)

My vision is to activate and develop my students' critical consciousness while fostering a strong culture of learning and academic achievement that doesn't diminish their cultural integrity. Doing so will allow my students to envision, plan for, and begin to act on their own personal academic and life goals within the realities of the many social inequalities they face.

What student outcomes at the end of the year give confidence students are making progress toward the vision?

What teacher actions define successful teaching?

What teacher mindsets define successful teaching?